About the Program

The Shape of the Coast

Continuing the Shape of the Coast program's tradition of providing the scientific, economic, and sociological context in which coastal legal and policy issues arise, this year we open with a look at the concept of "ecosystem services" and the complexities inherent in applying the concept in effectively managing coastal resources. Because effective coastal resource management requires financial resources, recent state and federal funding cuts will present serious challenges to state coastal regulatory programs, our second speaker will discuss the impacts of these funding cuts. The morning session will conclude with the chair of the Coastal Resources Commission providing his annual update on the CRC's activities and decisions over the past year and a peek at the issues on the CRC's agenda for the upcoming year. The afternoon session begins with a discussion of significant developments in state and federal case law and legislation affecting the use and management of coastal resources. The final session of the day will discuss the emerging issues of the inner coast region and some proposals to address those issues.

About the Center

The North Carolina Coastal Resources Law, Planning and Policy Center is an inter-institutional entity in which the North Carolina School of Law, the North Carolina Sea Grant Program and the University of North Carolina Department of City and Regional Planning are partners. The Center's mission is to assist the people of North Carolina in addressing the pressing coastal and ocean resource and development issues confronting the state. It is a research, advisory and educational entity providing research support to state agencies, state advisory group and panels, local governments and community organizations in their efforts to address coastal and ocean resource and development issues and promote the sustainable use of coastal lands, waters and natural resources. The Center also engages in the study of long-term coastal use and development trends and issues and communicates the results of this effort through the semi-annual publication of Legal Tides, a newsletter currently being sent to 1300 state agency and local government personnel, community organizations, and interested individuals, white papers available on its website and scholarly publications. Through conferences and other programs, the Center engages in continuing outreach to coastal professionals, community organizations and others with an interest in coastal and ocean resource issues.

About NC Sea Grant

North Carolina Sea Grant began in 1970. Today, this university-based program is part of a network of thirty Sea Grant programs that wrap the shores of the Atlantic, the Pacific, the Gulf of Mexico and the Great Lakes. North Carolina Sea Grant has focused intellectual resources of North Carolina's major universities on coastal economic development, coastal ecosystem health and human resources to address coastal issues. With its emphasis on solid, peer-reviewed scientific research coupled with outreach, Sea Grant has gained a reputation as a reliable source for valid solutions and timely information about our coast. North Carolina Sea Grant provides a holistic approach to a wide range of topics that have direct impacts not only along the North Carolina coast, but also across the state and the country.
